liberal republican party was formed which nominated Joseph Brooks for governor, supported Greeley for president, pledged itself to remove the support of the conservative vote. The democrats could not get up any enthusiasm in behalf of Breoks, but as the best thing they could do unde the circumstances, and as the mos likely means of getting a fair election and breaking the power of the rascals who ruled the state, they

of their own, and their papers generally supported Brooks. This policy forced the radicals also to bid for democratic votes by promising the removal of all disa-bilities and by nominating Baxter, a man who was not identified with the dominant ring of his party, and who had the confidence of the peo-ple irrespective of party. A belief that he was an honest, liberal man who would make a good governor, and would never be controlled by only to save themselves, secured him a considerable number of Democratic votes. But nobody denies now that Brooks heat him, and the frauds by which he was made Governor de facto were perpetrated and are now confessed by the very men who are o-day endeavoring to oust him and put Brooks in his place by revolutionary measures!

When all their frauds in registration and polling the votes had failed to carry Arkansas, the radical state officers manipulated the returns so as to secure a majority in the legis-lature and to declare Baxter elected. These frauds were exposed in the press, and Brooks called on the U. . Court for the same remedy which had just proved so efficacious in unseating McEnery in Louisians; but that court denied that it had jurns-diction of the case and refused to adopt the Durell precedent. It was useless for him to apply to the State Supreme Court, as cClure of that tribunal was "Boes" of the guilty ring, and was at the same time editor of the Little Rock Republican, in which capacity he freely denounced Brooks' claims and jurisdiction of the case as it was a political question.
